SAVE THE CHILDREN URGES DILG TO PRIORITIZE EMERGENCY PROGRAMS FOR CHILDREN AMID DANGERS OF CONSECUTIVE TYPHOONS

Save the Children Philippines urges the Department of the Interior and Local Government (DILG) to prioritize the development and roll-out of the Comprehensive Emergency Program for Children (CEPC) across all local government units as children face the consecutive impacts of Super Typhoon Egay (international name: Doksuri) and Typhoon Falcon (international name: Khanun).

The Republic Act No. 10821 or the “Children’s Emergency Relief and Protection Act” passed in 2016 requires LGUs to formulate the CEPC that will ensure that children, and pregnant and lactating mothers are well protected before, during, and after disasters.

“Children are the most vulnerable during disasters. The multidimensional stress they experience from difficult situations during emergencies and calamities affects their physical, emotional, and psychological well-being,” said Save the Children Philippines CEO, Atty. Alberto Muyot.

According to Save the Children Philippines, the duo has affected more than 150,000 children across the provinces in Luzon, Visayas, and Mindanao. Reports said that more than 3 million Filipinos were affected by the heavy rains, strong winds, and floods resulting to infrastructure damage at 3.6 billion pesos and agriculture damage close to 2 billion pesos.

The Philippine weather bureau estimated that 3 more typhoons are expected to enter the country this August.

“If we have emergency programs for children in place across LGUs, necessary support can be provided to children and affected people. They will also have lesser chances of being exposed to dangers such as abuse, harassment, trafficking, neglect, and exploitation,” said Muyot.

Save the Children Philippines was the lead child rights organization in advocating for the enactment of R.A. 10821. President Ferdinand “Bongbong” Marcos, Jr. also supported the “Children’s Emergency Relief and Protection Act” while he was still a Senator in the 16th Congress.

However, seven years have passed since the Philippine Government enacted R.A. 10821 but the adoption, localization, and implementation of the CEPC have yet to be put in place across hundreds of LGUs.
